

Full accounting needed

I've been reading a great deal about the president of the United States of America, and wanted to type you a letter.

We live in a country where it has become acceptable practice to lie under oath, tell half-truths, lie through omission and not give a full accounting of one's actions. It seems as though "getting there" has become more important than "how" we get there. We should all be praying for our country and the first family.

The president should resign or be impeached. He has brought shame to the office he holds and our country. We should all forgive the president when and if he takes real responsibility for his actions.

What have we become when the moral compass of the free world has an affair with a 21-year-old intern?

And to the president: "Sir, people cannot change truth, but truth can change people."
